

Dear readers

It is with great pleasure that we introduce the SOCIUM, a peer-reviewed journal providing a platform for researchers to engage in scientific discourse and debate within the realms of social and clinical psychology, as well as related fields. The journal is dedicated to fostering discussions on the intricate connections between individuals and society through both theoretical and empirical research.

SOCIUM prides itself on its interdisciplinary nature, welcoming contributions from sociologists and psychologists alike. We encourage authors to employ diverse methodologies and perspectives, and we are committed to publishing original articles covering a wide range of topics, including but not limited to: Social cognition, Attitudes, Social influence, Intergroup relations, Self and identity, Leadership, Culture and cross-cultural relations, Relationships, Psychopathology, Psychotherapeutic processes, Clinical health psychology, Behavioral medicine.

In light of the dynamic and fluid nature of society, there is an increasing demand for a rigorous and interdisciplinary approach to understanding its complexities. Through SOCIUM, we strive to establish a platform for scholarly discourse that delves into the intricate interplay between individual experiences and the ever-changing dynamics of society. We welcome researchers to share their innovative and insightful work in our journal, thereby advancing our collective understanding of these crucial areas of inquiry.
